1. The Gianni collection caught the eyes of passers-by, drawing them in. Printed in black-and-white, it served as a working example of not only Arc-Com's contemporary patterning in their textile lines, but their printed wallcovering capabilities as well.

2. There were several times during our tour that I stopped to say "oh wow" at Tarkett's selection, but the Infinities Collection made the biggest impact on me. Working with designers Georginna Stout (shown), DB Kim, Kristina Ninivaggi, and Suzanne Tick, this collection is sure to be seen in the upcoming year.

3. Admittantly, BuzziSpace's Jungle wasn't the most realistic piece of NeoCon 2016, but it was definitely the most "buzzed" about. Best described as an adult jungle gym, it combines resting and socializing with questioning your outfit choice. It definitely made an impact during the week and made us all feel like kids at heart.

5. While Midcentury Modernism has made its impact on the market, Leland's commitment to authenticity took it a step further with their Rapson® Thirty-Nine Collection. Using original concept sketches by Ralph Rapson (1914-2008) found in the Cranbrook Academy's archives and through collaboration with his family, they meticulously recreated his works.

Veni, vidi, vici. While Julius Caesar may not have had four days of meetings in the Chicago Merchandise Mart during NeoCon 2016 in mind when he used the iconic phrase, the i+s team nonetheless emerged victorious. Here, EIC Kadie Yale shares just the briefest of highlights from the show with you.
